Non-Partisan Welcome Accorded Sutherland

Upon His Return to Washington Following His Triumph at Primary Election.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM)
WASHINGTON, June 17.—There has been nothing partisan in the welcome back to Washington given Congressman-at-large Howard Sutherland by his hosts of friends here. The stream of callers at his office in the House building since his arrival yesterday, embraced all parties, both sexes and a mixture of colors. If anything, it is probable that among those who have called in person were more Democrats than Republicans, for the very natural reason that there are more of them here. The senatorial nominee has gotten along well with the dominant party's personnel, and is personally—if not politically—respected and esteemed by them. They called because they can't help admiring a man who, against such tremendous odds as Sutherland faced, could win such a signal victory with—on the surface of it—such apparent ease.

In addition to the many who have congratulated him in person, hundreds of telegrams and letters have poured in at the office of Congressman Sutherland from everywhere, but most of them from West Virginians, of course. Included among them were congratulations from those whose ambitions for the same office his success defeated, and from leaders of every party group, element or faction. There had been nothing in his candidacy it appears to have wrought any estrangement nor sore spots of consequence. He won a great personal victory fairly and squarely in the universal verdict apparent from the great number and the character of the congratulations which are being showered down upon him. There doesn't seem to be anybody who begrudges him his laurels. The party has rallied to him in his hour of triumph with a decisive unanimity and an enthusiasm so great as to drown out any stray discordant note if there has been one tainted anywhere in the party, which is doubted. He deserves all the praise he is getting, because he honorably earned it, as everybody says.

Among the surprises handed out by the primary to the Republican politicians, Congressman Sutherland's nomination for senator was the big one. In their lineups, the Elkins man had been left out, partly due to the fact that the man who finished first in the race was last to get into it, and they had "chosen up sides" before the slim, sleek racer from Randolph county formally declared that he had heard and hearkened to a popular demand that he breast the tape. If the politicians thought that Sutherland was kidding himself about the voice he heard, Sutherland didn't think so. He had been doing a business through the postoffice with the individual voters from day to day ever since he came down here to Congress in 1913. He was in touch with the Toms, the Dicks and the Harrys of the state as no man in Congress from West Virginia has ever been within the memory of the present generation. They would write Howard and Howard would write them, and no fling, formal reply either, but one thing of the personality of the man, his ideas and interest, advice and suggestions. These letters were on subjects too numerous to mention, and they began to be written from the very first day that Howard Sutherland came to Washington after his election in 1912, and they grew in number from day to day like "pigs in pigs." It all started long before anybody ever gave the Hon. H. Sutherland a thought coupled up with some day representing West Virginia in the United States Senate, or before that gentleman ever gave it a thought himself, for that matter, although he may have had a dream or two about it that many years back. Lots of folks, since the sixth instance, have noticed a phenomenal fact connected with H. Sutherland. He has a long head. Is the Senate? Back came their answers along narrow lines to a bulge in the back. At any rate, when that senatorial opportunity knocked, it found Howard Sutherland with an army of personal correspondents throughout West Virginia for whom he had worked and to whom he had written from time to time, and whose favor and confidence he had. That had been proved in his several prior contests. So, when the opportunity came senatorially, Sutherland sent forth a call to battle via the mails which caused a mobilization of the Sutherlands at the postoffice in West Virginia. The question was would they stand by him if he tried for the senate? Back came their answers—they would. Then it was that Howard Sutherland announced his candidacy and swung it in between two other opposing candidacies with nary a doubt of beating them both, while the politicians ranged up on the sidelines declared he would be crushed to bits. There was some crushing to bits but it didn't happen to Sutherland. The basis of Mr. Sutherland's campaign, briefly stated, was personality and publicity. He had made good in Congress, in every private and official position, and he had made good as a tuner at the polls. He had been a regular "bear cat" for work, and he had always believed in a direct appeal to the people individually and collectively. When he undertook his senatorial campaign he planned to continue that appeal. The plan of his entire campaign was to use the mails and every means of legitimate advertising he could afford, especially the newspapers. The limited campaign fund he had at his disposal went that way in its entirety. He didn't have a paid worker at a single polling place, nor a paid representative in the field. His headquarters was his own office in the House building in which, for thirty days, a force of five stenographers squeezed in between hales of advertising matter as they pounded their machines. Many a candidate for sheriff has had a more elaborate headquarters layout than that.

It was a hard working little force though, and it put in many hours, with Mr. Sutherland working harder than any of them and in direct touch with every detail of his campaign whether he was here or on the road. Their chief was hardly more delighted over his remarkable victory than were Secretary Heffner and the local little band who toiled with him day and night for thirty crowded, work-weary days to bring about a successful issue.

Eight years ago Howard Sutherland was elected to his first office—the state senate. Thence to the House of Representatives twice, defeating the strongest men the opposition could pit against him, and now on his way to the United States senate, with not a Republican anywhere doubtful that he will not arrive there next November. That is the remarkably brief political chronology of this man whose deserved good fortune is now filling the eyes as one of the most interesting and novel developments in the history of West Virginia politics.

Congressman Sutherland is back on the job, and says he is here to stay until Congress adjourns. He looks none the worse for the wear and tear and worry of a campaign which made great demands upon the physical condition of every man engaged in it in a major role. While most of them, both victors and vanquished, have tied themselves away to some resort to recuperate, or plan soon to do so when the doubts of the primary's outcome are dispelled, the Hon. Howard Sutherland is at his desk quietly and unostentatiously plugging away.

A regular bear cat for work, is that Howard Sutherland, senator-to-be.

GET ACQUAINTED WITH "PYROX"

YOU MIGHT LIKE IT!

Spray Some Apple Trees With it You will find that it does two things—kills the leaf eating insects and stops blight, rot, rust, wilt and similar fanfous troubles.

Read what C. H. Hansing, Southport, Ind., says about it: "I used Pyrox on fruit and have 90 per cent sound pears, and practically 100 per cent sound cherries. Last year I was able to spray with it three times and got 98 per cent sound fruit on my apples. If there is anything better than Pyrox, I would like to know it. If I cannot get Pyrox, I would quit spraying." If Pyrox will do as much for you as it did for Mr. Hansing, and it may wouldn't you like it?

CHOOSE your spray; don't let anyone pick it out for you. Don't lose your crop, your labor and your spraying material too by using an inferior spray. Spray with Pyrox. It does the work and saves the crop and your labor. Good for practically all fruits and vegetables. No Experiment—Used since 1898. $1.00 buys trial crock big enough to make 35 gallons of spray.
